Background

According to EU GMP Guide Part 1, Chapter 6, Quality Control (6.15) and US 21 CFR 211.194, analytical procedures must be suitable for their intended purpose. The regulatory requirements to validation of analytical procedures utilised for release and stability studies of drug substances and drug products are described in the ICH guideline Q2(R1). However, its degree of detail is rather low and the discussion is mainly focused on chromatographic methods. The latter is one of the reasons for the just started revision of the guideline, as well as inclusion of lifecycle and risk management aspects, which gained increasing attention in the last years.

Educational Objectives

Besides regulatory expectations, the Webinar series provides practical recommendations and orientation for demonstration of the suitability of analytical procedures. A rational and efficient validation approach is ultimately based on the respective routine application, which should be reflected in the validation design. This includes the identification of the relevant performance parameters, the selection of appropriate tests and calculations and, in particular the establishment of acceptance criteria for the evaluation.

The following topics will be covered in the part „Impurities Determination“:

- Regulatory requirements
- Concentration dependence of precision (Horwitz function)
- Acceptable precision and accuracy
- Determination of the quantitation limit (blank procedures, from linearity, from precision, from standard addition)
- Is less more?
 - Capability and requirement based quantitation limits
- Consideration of practical relevance (samples, concentration range for linearity approaches)

Target Audience

The webinar is aimed at executives and employees from Quality Control, Quality Assurance, and regulatory who want to gain a better understanding of the GMP requirements as well as current trends and are interested in practical recommendations for an efficient design, execution, and evaluation of a successful analytical validation.
